

Battle of the daughters

While the Nov 8 United States presidential election is a battle of the sexes, each of the contenders has a glamorous, high-achieving daughter stumping for them in their corners. Here's how Ms Chelsea Clinton, whose mother is Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton, and Ms Ivanka Trump, daughter of Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump, compare.

Of their friendship

Chelsea told Extra news programme: "It has nothing to do with politics. We were friends before this election; we'll be friends after this election."

Ivanka told People magazine: "We're both incredibly supportive of our parents, as we should be. But we also continue to have great respect for one another."

Campaign efforts

- Campaigned for her mother's unsuccessful bid for the Democratic presidential nomination in 2008, speaking at more than 100 college campuses.
- Also campaigned for her mother during this year's primaries.
- Expected to stump for her now to help attract young Bernie Sanders supporters.

- Campaigned for her father during the primaries while heavily pregnant.
- Expected to hit the road for him now, with the aim of softening his image as a loud bully, and appealing to women voters.
